Lager (Pilsener, etc)

A lager is a type of beer that is recognized by its high carbonation level and light color, though some modern lager beers are darker in color and may even be black. In order to aid in the brewing process, the brewers created a type of yeast that was cable of helping cold beer mature properly. This yeast is still used today to make lager beer and is referred to as bottom-fermenting yeast. Pilsner is one of the most popular styles of lager beers in Germany, and in many other countries. Classic German Pilsners are very light straw to golden in color. Head should be dense and rich.

Wheat Ale (Hefe-Weizen, Dunkel-Weizen, Weizenbock, Doppelbock, etc)

Wheat Ale, a south German style of wheat beer made with a typical ratio of 50:50, or even higher, wheat. A yeast that produces a unique phenolic flavors of banana and cloves with an often dry and tart edge, some spiciness, bubblegum or notes of apples. Little hop bitterness, and a moderate level of alcohol. Often served with a lemon wedge (popularized by Americans), to either cut the wheat or yeast edge, which many either find to be a flavorful snap ... or an insult and something that damages the beer's taste and head retention.
